DEEP MEADOW
Woodbine
Private

Deep Meadow is a simple country farm house believed to have been constructed as two homes which compose an L plan. It appears on the Hopkins Atlas of 1878 as the property of John Quick but its interior woodwork and stone foundation with log supporting beams bespeak an earlier date.

A two bay wide, one room deep, two story gable roofed early structure now facing west originally faced south while a later three bay wide, two bay deep two story gabled roof structure faces south.

Stone chimneys are placed on the north wall of the original kitchen wing and on the east wall of the addition. A one story shed roofed porch runs along the south elevation of the addition supported by six wooden posts. Lying on the west wall of this second structure is a one story high library addition two bays wide and one room deep with exposed brick chimney on its west wall.

Restoration of and addition to this simple farm house have been carried out sensitively and tastefully by the present owners Mrs. Margaret and Mr. David Zeeveld under the guidance of Mr. John Poe Tyler of the architectural firm of Tyler, Chalfant and McShane.

A restored peg barn lies north of the main house.

DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (if known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

Coming from Baltimore on Route 40 toward Frederick, turn off at Cooksville on Route 97 and proceed south past Route 144 and the Glenwood Middle School to Union Chapel Road. Go west on Union Chapel Road until you come to Daisy Road. Turn left for a half a mile until you come to Deep Meadow on your left.

The building has been constructed in three sections. The first two story frame section is the present and original kitchen, with a single bedroom above, two bays wide and one room deep with a sediment field stone foundation featuring log beam supports and an east cellar entrance with four lite basement window. A gable roof runs north-south with the north wall holding an exposed stone chimney.

*Quite early a second two story structure with gable roof running east-west intersecting with the kitchen wings gable roof was built against the kitchen's south wall. It is a three bay wide, two bay deep frame structure with central north and south rectangular entrances surmounted by four-lite transoms and featuring open bible and cross paneling. This section holds the present dining room, living room and staircase with two upstairs bedrooms and bath. It has a similar stone foundation (its first floor is also supported by log beams which run north-south rather than east-west) to that found under the kitchen and was originally used as a root cellar whose dirt floor is now cemented in. (Belmont (1738) also features a stone foundation with log beam supports.) An east cellar entrance to the root cellar has been partially filled in and now holds a two lite basement window. An exposed stone and brick chimney lies on the east wall south of the original cellar entrance.

A shed roofed one story open porch lies along the south wall of this south wing.

*Lying west of this second structure, is a one story high library addition lying on the west wall of the living room which is two bays wide and one room deep featuring a south rectangular door surmounted by a five lite transom and double-hung windows with six-over-six lights. A wide brick exposed chimney lies against its west wall.

The interior features white pine wide planked floors in the upstairs bedrooms and an enclosed one way staircase in the kitchen wing's east wall. The bedroom above it features a cove ceiling

Original paneling is found along the stairs of the living room wing and along the west wall of the dining room. Random width oak floors replace the original wide pine floors in the living and dining rooms as well as being utilized in the newly constructed library wing (1970).

A brick wall and walk enclosing a lovely patio lies on the south side of the farm house surrounded by mature evergreen and holly trees.

Northwest of the house is a one story barn constructed of oak and chestnut and put together with pegs. The large barn door faces west while the east wall holds rectangular double-hung windows with six-over-six lites and a large twenty-eight lite window.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

Deep Meadow is a simple country farm house which has been fortunate in having owners with taste and sensitivity who have restored it and added in 1970 a comfortable library wing.

It is noted on the Hopkins Atlas of 1878 for Howard County as the property of John Quick, consisting of 104.5 acres.

Restoration work has been carried on by Mr. John Poe Tyler, architect of the Baltimore architectural firm of Tyler, Chalfant & McShane who believes the building was constructed as two homes. Another architect, Mr. Gordon Kennedy, friend of the family, believes the kitchen wing to have been constructed circa 1820. The wide stone chimney which lies on the north wall of the kitchen goes down to the basement and may have been used at the time for cooking or for curing meat.

Deep Meadows real significance is due to the care and thought which has gone into a relatively modest farm house, creating a comfortable and tastefully executed exterior and interior plan which has adhered strictly to the original features and character of the house.
